At the start of the summer season, we have had a return to a double digit reduction, year on year in regard to passenger numbers. Unsurprisingly the international numbers are better than the domestic, following the loss of the Heathrow service. The movements for Charter and Scheduled flights has reduced more, in percentage terms, than the passenger numbers, which tends to indicate the remaining flights will have a better load factor. The moving annual total figure also continues to decline, but I am confident that things will start to improve in the not too distant future (my bet is July!)

On the international front, this month saw a very strange mix of figures, in that there were 17 routes that increased in passengers and 24 that saw reductions with 5 new routes, 8 routes that have ceased and one route where exactly the same number of passengers travelled in both 2008 and 2009 (La Rochelle). The positive routes of note are Innsbruck, Larnaca, Islamabad, Pisa and Toulouse. The worst ones were Avignon, Burgas, Malta, Olbia, and many others with a reduction of 15-20%. The routes with the most passengers are Palma (19798), Amsterdam (18567) and Alicante (17090). Last year it was Amsterdam, Palma and then Dublin.

Domestically, Newquay increased from 259 to 1709 passengers, Plymouth was a new route and Belfast City increased very slightly. All the other routes reduced by more than 20% except Jersey (-6%), Isle of Man (-15%) and Southampton (-15%)
